

Grounded in Brussels

by Cat Knarr, p.36

1. Terrorist attacks, like the one in Brussels, seem to be on the rise. When you hear about such crises what is your response?
2. How do you see God when things go terribly wrong in your own life?
3. The team stranded at the airport had several interactions with other stranded passengers. What experience do you have of being on the receiving end of the kindness of strangers?
4. Cat Knarr asks, “What do we do when we’re overwhelmed by the darkness in the world, when we feel like we’re so insignificant that we can’t possibly do anything to defeat it? What do we do when we feel powerless to do anything that matters in these issues of epic proportions?” How would you answer her questions?
5. Knarr was greatly influenced in her decision to return home due to the anxiety of her family. How influenced are you in your decisions by family and loved ones?
