

Scripture Demands More

by C. John Weborg, p. 46

In “Scripture Demands More,” C. John Weborg suggests that reading the Bible, with the guidance of the Spirit, and then doing what it says is the only way to truly understand and treasure the word.

1. John Weborg describes David Nyvall as “tenderly holding” his Greek New Testament. Who from your own life would you say personifies that kind of reverence for God’s word?
2. When you read your Bible, do you tend to read straight through, choose verses and sections according to a devotional, or focus on one story or theme?
3. In what way have you understood the Bible better by actively doing what it says?
4. According to Weborg, “Reading the word without doing the word is a waste.” Do you agree? When might it be important to read the Scriptures for knowledge?
5. Which of the quotes included in the article (Luther, Spener, Robertson, or Francke) impacted you most? Why?
